STIRRUP SENSE!

In the seventh century, there came from [illegible] a fighter who had [illegible]. As a boy he had visited the important cities of the land. He compared the luxury and ease of the people in the walled cities with the kind of life he, his father, and his people led. He came to the conclusion that the only life worth living was the tough, hard, and fighting one. His name was Masul and he became leader of his tribe.

Now it is one thing to feel you want [illegible] with but a small army. And it [illegible] something else to try to turn that dream into reality. It probably would have gotten no further than perhaps day dreaming were it not for Ben Amed. We know nothing of the early life of this great military genius, inventor, strategist, and in his later life ruler [illegible].

But their paths crossed and it became the task of Ben Amed to create a fighting force that would be the finest in its day. He did draw up plans for each battle, campaign or attack that was to be made. And now Hanut, head of his intelligence staff, told him the news.

"Prince Issam Brood is collecting a large fighting force. He is uniting the tribes in the South. He will then challenge you to an open fight. If you refuse, he will brand you a coward. That will [illegible] more tribes to his standard. And if you should accept the offer to fight, those Masa Tribesmen will wreak havoc with their swords."

The swords of the enemy must first [illegible] the hordes of our men to strike. If they can't do this they are defeated. The Masa Tribesmen are only fighters on their horses. On foot, they are useless and can be defeated," said Ben Amed.

"From which I figure that if we can get them off their horses, then victory will be ours," smiled Hanut. "I am certain you must have a plan in mind."

"I do," replied Ben Amed. "You leave at once. You will take my quickest galley. The winds are favorable. By tomorrow you must be across the straits. You go to the court of Prince Sala-[illegible]. His [illegible] is Count Arrozan. You deliver a message to him that I will write. As a token of good faith I have [illegible]. He owes this to me.

[illegible] Hanut [illegible] to the [illegible] up beside the Prince.

"All I know is that Ben Amed wants my help. He has sent a box of gold and jewels. To bring as many lances and stirrups for horses as I can gather. Also to come with a dozen of my best knights. To teach some of his chosen soldiers something. But what? This he does not write in the message. So I leave as requested. We have a treaty with Lan. And this I honor in your name."

Three days later, Count Arrozan was with Ben Amed, Yasul Hanut and several leaders of the fighting forces. Ben Amed spoke what was on his mind.

"The Masa Tribesmen ride their horses only with the pressure of their feet. They know nothing about the use of the stirrups. That is my plan. You will show some of my men how to ride with the stirrups. They will use the long lance to unseat the enemy. Once off their horses, [illegible] necessary. Then victory will be ours."

It was a rather surprised Prince Issam Brood [illegible] an acceptance of the offer to fight. Mounted men against mounted men. So he held a great celebration. Victory would soon be his. And when the day came, the sky was clear. [illegible] went into battle the Masa Tribesmen. With their swords in hand, they rose to meet the enemy. But when they came within striking distance [illegible] were unhorsed by long lances. And soon [illegible] Count Arrozan and his knights had joined in the battle.

[illegible] head of Prince Issam Brood now adorned a pike. War here wasn't exactly gentle in those days. The amount of booty was enormous. And Ben Amed saw to it that a large share went to Count Arrozan and his knights for their help in turning what might have been a great defeat into an overwhelming victory. There were three days of [illegible] to their homeland. And the empire of Yasul had again been extended.
